

Glen Hills Primary School Curriculum Policy Statement

The role of education is one of the most important elements in British society in the 21st century.

Values underpinning the Glen Hill Primary School curriculum

Education influences and reflects the values of society and the kind of society we want to be. It is important, therefore, to recognise a broad set of common values and purposes that underpin the school and the work of schools. At Glen Hills Primary School we insist on the important link between pupil, school and home. Working together we endeavour to create common values to prepare every child for their place in society.

These values include valuing ourselves, our families and other relationships, the wider groups to which we belong, the diversity in our society and the environment in which we live. Education should also reaffirm our commitment to the virtues of truth, honesty, trust and a sense of duty. At the same time education must enable us to respond positively to the opportunities and challenges of the rapidly changing world in which we live and work.

Our values are embodied by our 'Route To Resilience' Programme, which encompasses our 20 character muscles (linked to Growth Mind set and behavioural expectations).

Aims for our school curriculum

Aim 1: Glen Hills Primary School curriculum should provide inclusive opportunities for all pupils to learn and achieve. At Glen Hills Primary School this aim is covered in more detail in the Statement of Aims, in the school policies for Special Educational Needs and Equality and in our Education Intent Statements.

Aim 2: Glen Hills Primary School curriculum should aim to promote pupils' mental, physical, spiritual, moral, social and cultural development and prepare all pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of life. In particular, the school should develop principles for distinguishing between right and wrong and to foster a sense of 'fairness'. It should promote pupils' knowledge, understanding and appreciation of their own and different beliefs and cultures, and how these influence individuals and societies. At Glen Hills Primary School, these are covered in more detail in the Statement of Aims and in the school policies for Spiritual, Moral, Social and Cultural Education, Personal, Health, Social and Economic Education, Relationships and Sex Education and Equality.

The interdependence of the two aims

These two aims reinforce each other. The personal development of pupils' mentally, physically, spiritually, morally, socially and culturally, plays a significant part in the ability to learn, to achieve and to fulfil their potential. Development in both areas is essential to raising standards of attainment for all pupils.

The purposes of the National Curriculum

The Education Act 1996 (section 351) requires that all schools provide a balanced and broadly based curriculum that:

- promotes the spiritual, moral, cultural, mental and physical development of pupils at the school and of society
- prepares pupils at the school for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life.

The four main purposes of the National Curriculum

To establish an entitlement

The National Curriculum secures for all pupils, irrespective of social background, culture, race, gender, differences in ability and disabilities, an entitlement to a number of areas of learning to develop knowledge, understanding, skills and attitudes necessary for their self-fulfilment and development as active and responsible citizens.

To establish standards

The National Curriculum makes expectations for learning and attainment explicit to pupils, parents, teachers, governors, employers and the public, and establishes national standards for the performance of all pupils in the subjects it includes. These standards can be used to set targets for improvement, measure progress towards those targets, and monitor and compare performance between individuals, groups and schools.

To promote continuity and coherence

The National Curriculum contributes to a coherent national framework that promotes curriculum continuity and is sufficiently flexible to ensure progression in pupils' learning. It facilitates the transition of pupils between schools and phases of education and provides a foundation for lifelong learning.

To promote public understanding

The National Curriculum aims to increase public understanding of, and confidence in, the work of schools and in the learning and achievements resulting from compulsory education. It also aims to provide a common basis for discussion of educational issues among lay and professional groups, including pupils, parents, teachers, governors and employers.

As an academy, Glen Hills Primary School has increased freedom in designing its curriculum. Our curriculum has been developed to be as ambitious as the National Curriculum. Topics are selected to extend and/or enhance learning opportunities for pupils, ensuring Cultural Capital and British Values are key. A more detailed curriculum overview, including specific subjects' progression maps and planning, can be found on the school website.

At Glen Hills Primary School we recognise that our curriculum must be responsive to changes in society and the economy, and changes in the nature of schooling itself. Teachers, individually and collectively, have to reappraise their teaching in response to the changing needs of their pupils and the impact of economic, social and cultural change. Education only flourishes if it successfully adapts to the demands and needs of the time.
